EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

This Bill seeks to amend the Retirement Age Act (Cap. 274A) for the following main purposes:

- (a) to introduce a set of eligibility criteria for the purposes of re-employment of employees;
- (b) to require employers to re-employ eligible employees;

- (c) to provide various avenues for employees to seek recourse for re-employment disputes; and
- (d) to make technical amendments to update existing provisions and introduce offences relating to re-employment.

The Bill also makes consequential amendments to the Income Tax Act (Cap. 134) and the Industrial Relations Act (Cap. 136).

Clause 1 relates to the short title and commencement.

Clause 2 makes an amendment to the long title of the Act.

Clause 3 makes an amendment to the short title. The Act is now renamed as the Retirement and Re-employment Act.

Clause 4 amends section 2(1) by inserting new definitions of “Commissioner”, “eligible employee”, “employment assistance payment”, “prescribed minimum retirement age”, “re-employment”, “salary”, “specified age” and “tripartite guidelines”.

Clause 5 repeals and re-enacts section 3 which provides for the appointment of certain officers.

Clause 6 makes technical amendments to section 4.

Clause 7 amends section 5 by substituting the references to “older employees” with “employees”, and substitutes the references to “wages” with “salary”. Subsection (7) is deleted as it is no longer required.

Clause 8 makes a technical amendment to section 6.

Clause 9 repeals and re-enacts section 7 and inserts new sections 7A, 7B and 7C.

The new section 7 relates to the eligibility criteria for re-employment. An employee who attains the specified age (as defined in section 2(1)) before 1st January 2012 is not eligible for re-employment. The new section 7 also provides for a presumption that an employee is medically fit for the purposes of re-employment. The onus falls on the employer to prove, on a balance of probabilities, that his employee is not medically fit.

The new section 7A imposes a requirement for employers to re-employ eligible employees. The obligation on an employer will begin from the time an eligible employee attains the specified age and continue until the eligible employee attains the age of 65 years (or such higher age as may be prescribed by the Minister).

An employer will be deemed to have complied with the requirement to re-employ an eligible employee if the employer allows his employee (being an employee who attains the specified age on or after 1st January 2012) to continue to work for him beyond the specified age and the employer does not offer a new contract of service to the employee or terminate his contract. In such instance, any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred by the employee under the contract of service between him and his employer before he attains the specified age is not affected. Therefore, if under the previous contract of service, an employee is entitled to a certain number of days of annual leave based on a period of continuous service with his employer, the employee will continue to enjoy such entitlement which is based on his previous period of continuous service with his employer.

For the purposes of re-employment, a new contract of service may be entered into by the employee and his employer in which the job scope and the terms and conditions may vary from the previous contract of service between them. Any variation must be based on reasonable factors such as, but not limited to, the employee's productivity, performance, duties and responsibilities, and the wage system such as the seniority system applicable to the employee.

Unless otherwise agreed by the parties to a new contract of service for the purpose of re-employment, the period of employment stipulated in the contract must not be less than one year at any one time. Where the period between the effective date of the coming into force of a new contract of service for the purpose of re-employment and the date on which an employee attains the age of 65 years (or such higher age as may be prescribed by the Minister) is less than one year, the period of employment stipulated in the new contract of service may be for that shorter period. For example, if the new contract of service for the purpose of re-employment is effective when the eligible employee is 64 years 6 months old, the new contract may be made which is valid for 6 months, i.e., until the eligible employee turns 65 years old.

Notwithstanding any of the provisions of the Act, an eligible employee may retire or be retired, if he does not wish to be employed by his employer on or after the date he attains the specified age.

The new section 7B relates to the period of service under a previous contract of service between an employer and his eligible employee. With certain exceptions, when a new contract of service is entered into between an employer and his eligible employee pursuant to the new section 7A(4), then for the purposes of determining any right, privilege, obligation or liability to be acquired, accrued or incurred by the employee under his new contract of service, any period for which the employee has served his employer under the previous contract of service before he commences his service under the new contract of service is disregarded. For example, if an employee has served under his employer for a period of 10 years before he attains the age of 62 years old on or after 1st January 2012, then upon re-employment at the age of 62 years old, such period of service will not be taken into account for the purpose of determining the number of days of annual leave which the eligible employee is entitled to under the new contract of service. However, any period for which an employee has served under his employer before he commences his service under the new contract of service for the purpose of re-employment can be taken into account for the purpose of computing the minimum period of 3 months for entitlement to annual leave under section 43(1) of the Employment Act (Cap. 91), and also for determining the period of service of an employee for entitlement to paid sick leave under section 89(1) and (2) of the Employment Act.

Where there is more than one contract of service for the purpose of re-employment between an employer and his eligible employee, the aggregate periods for which the eligible employee has served under his employer under those contracts of service must be treated as continuous service for the purposes of determining any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred by the employee under those contracts. For example, an eligible employee may be re-employed for a period of one year each upon his attaining the ages of 62, 63 and 64 years old. His 3 separate periods of service with his employer under 3 different re-employment contracts each lasting one year will be treated as continuous service for the purpose of determining any right or benefits, etc., (eg., annual leave and paid sick leave) under those contracts.

The new section 7C imposes certain obligations on an employer if the employer is unable to re-employ an eligible employee because the employer is unable to find a vacancy in his establishment which is suitable for the eligible employee despite making reasonable attempts to do so in accordance with the tripartite guidelines. In particular, the employer will have to offer an employment assistance payment to the eligible employee for the purpose of assisting him to tide over the period during which the eligible employee attempts to find employment with another employer. However, the employer is not required to offer any employment assistance payment to an eligible employee who informs his employer of his decision not to continue to be employed by his employer on or after the date he attains the specified age. The employer must take into account the tripartite guidelines when determining the amount of employment assistance payment to be paid to an employee.

Clause 10 amends section 8 by making a technical change by substituting the phrase “60 years of age or the prescribed retirement age” in subsection (1) with the phrase “the specified age”. For consistency with the Employment Act (Cap. 91), section 8 is further amended by empowering the Minister to direct the Commissioner for Labour (the Commissioner), instead of an investigation officer, to inquire and report whether in the Commissioner’s opinion, an employee has been unlawfully dismissed on the ground of age. The penalty amount in subsection (7) is also increased.

Clause 11 inserts new sections 8A to 8F.

The new section 8A provides that when an employee has a re-employment dispute with his employer or if he considers that he has been dismissed without just cause or excuse, he must before making representations to the Minister or before lodging a claim with the Commissioner, as the case may be, notify the Commissioner in writing within certain time limits. The new section 8A further provides that upon receipt of the notice, the Commissioner may consult, or direct a conciliation officer to consult, the employer and employee concerned in an endeavour to assist them to reach an agreement through conciliation.

The new section 8B introduces certain remedies relating to unreasonable denial of re-employment and dismissal without just cause or excuse. An employee who claims his remedy under the new section 8B cannot also pursue his remedy under the new section 8C, or section 14(2) of the Employment Act or section 35(3) of the Industrial Relations Act (Cap. 136). Similarly, a person who pursues his remedy under section 14(2) of the Employment Act or section 35(3) of the Industrial Relations Act cannot also pursue his remedy under the new section 8B or new section 8C. The new section 8B further provides that the Minister may, before making a decision on any representations made to him, direct the Commissioner to inquire and report whether in his opinion the employee has been unreasonably denied of re-employment by his employer, or has been dismissed without just cause or excuse by his employer, as the case may be. If after considering any report made by the Commissioner, the Minister is satisfied that the employee has been unreasonably denied of re-employment by his employer, or dismissed by his employer without just cause or excuse, as the case may be, the Minister may direct the employer to re-employ the employee, or direct the employer to pay such amount of compensation as the Minister may consider just and equitable having regard to all the circumstances of the case. The employer must comply with the direction of the Minister.

If the Minister, after considering any report made by the Commissioner, is satisfied that in relation to a dispute, being a re-employment dispute over the matter referred to in the new section 8A(4)(b), the employer is unable to re-employ an eligible employee despite making reasonable attempts to find a vacancy in his establishment which is suitable for his employee, the Minister may allow the employee to lodge a claim for employment assistance payment with the Commissioner within such time as the Minister may determine.

In determining the amount of compensation to be awarded, the Minister may, in particular, have regard to the tripartite guidelines and the steps taken by the employer to re-employ his employee.

The new section 8C introduces certain remedies which are available to an employee who considers that any term or condition of his re-employment contract, or the amount of employment assistance payment offered by his employer, is unreasonable. The employee in such a situation may lodge a claim with the Commissioner to claim for the payment or the amount of the employment assistance payment.

An employee who claims his remedy under the new section 8C cannot also pursue his remedy under the new section 8B, or section 14(2) of the Employment Act (Cap. 91) or section 35(3) of the Industrial Relations Act (Cap. 136).

The new section 8D provides for the procedure for making and hearing claims.

The new section 8E relates to the joining of claims.

The new section 8F provides for the appeal against the decision or order of the Commissioner. The new section 8F further provides that no appeal must lie against any decision or order of the Commissioner unless a substantial question of law is involved in the appeal. In determining any appeal, the High Court may have regard to the tripartite guidelines.

Clause 12 amends section 9 by conferring certain powers on the Commissioner and investigating officers.

Clause 13 inserts new sections 9A, 9B and 9C.

The new section 9A relates to the investigation of complaints and offences.

The new section 9B provides for the offence of obstruction of any employee in appearing before the Commissioner pursuant to any summons issued under the Act. It is also an offence for a person to wilfully obstruct or impede any entry, inquiry or investigation made under the Act.

The new section 9C provides for the penalty in the situation where a person is guilty of any breach or any offence under the Act for which no penalty is otherwise provided.

Clause 14 amends section 10 by providing for the composition by the investigation officer (with the approval of the Commissioner) of any offence under the Act which is prescribed as a compoundable offence.

Clause 15 inserts new sections 11A and 11B.

The new section 11A relates to restriction on contracting out. This provision was formerly section 7, which has been repealed.

The new section 11B empowers the Minister to issue guidelines relating to the re-employment of eligible employees and the terms and conditions of re-employment of eligible employees, in the form of tripartite guidelines. Upon the publication of such guidelines in the Gazette, regard may be had to the guidelines for the purposes of Part III and sections 8A, 8B, 8C and 8F of the Act and section 34 of the Industrial Relations Act (Cap. 136).

Clause 16 amends section 12 by empowering the Minister to make regulations on certain matters.

Clause 17 amends the Act by dividing it into Parts.

Clause 18 makes consequential amendments to the Income Tax Act (Cap. 134).

Clause 19 makes consequential amendments to the Industrial Relations Act.

Clause 20 relates to certain savings and transitional provisions.
